Eopes of Rare Pearls.

Though there are many jewels, writes a Paris correspondent, you must not be led to believe that the Queen sent the crown jewels here, as I have seen asserted in some of your cotemporaties. The crown jewels are too precious a collection to be permitted to take the chances of a journey across the channel, subject to the dexterities of such cunning thieves as the Eoglish proverbially have. These jowels never leave the Tower of London in bulk. The Queen sometimes, on state occasions, adorns herself in a million or two of dollars' worth of them, but it would take a good many queens to carry them all at a time.

The French hesitated a long time before risking the State jewels within the walls of the exhibition—but finally devised proper security for their preservation. They are to be seen on the edge of the Prince of Wales' dominion, inclosed in a pyramid of glass, with strong iron clamps for fastening thereof; then circular railings of iron at double arm's length from the iogs of iron at double arm's length from the glass. This pinnacle of crystal is elevated on two steps above the floor; then inside the iron rail, at regular intervals, are four guards, changed every two or three hours during the exhibit. Then outside of these, and between the crowd and the jewels, another chain of guards in uniform, and then outside of these again and among the spectators, two other cordons of guards in civilians' attire.

With all these particulars you would naturally suppose the treasures safe; the government evidently does not, for the case-if such a mountain of velves and metal can be called a casa-is so arranged that in a moment any one of the four guards pressed between the rai's and the case can, by turning a sort of crank, cause the whole pyramid on which the jewels rest to sink into the deep vault under the pavement. This is what happens to the collection at the closing of the exhibition nightly. The guard turns his crank and the jewels disappear into a mysterious safe of iron and masonry.

The jewels are magnificent, beyond the power of mere words to say. Ropes of such pearls as would be called priceless; buckets full of diamends more glittering than frost drops in the sua, all manuer of stones known as precious, set in the most cestly and crafty fashious. Girdles of rubies, emeralds, sapphires-nost of the great orders of European nobility set in the most resplendent shapes; sweri hilts clustering and crusted in jewels and gold; imperial diadems, loaded with the richest trophies of the world's mines. Indeced, I always think, on contemplating this mountain of light, that the French people are foo!-

ish to invest a national debt in this fishion.

The center of the mass of jewels is the great diamond known as the "Regent," from its pos-session by the dissolute Duke of Orleans, regent of France, after Louis XIV. It is a diamond large as an ordinary wainut, and glittering in a million starry beams. Though not quite so large as the Kohinoor-mountain of light-in the British jewels, it is hardly second in real value or beauty. These jewels, which would fill a wash-tub, solidly packed, were in the possession of the Empross Eugenie when the Emperor left Paris, and so soon as shosaw the inevitable fall of the dynasty, she caused an inventory to be made, and before she fled from the Tuleries sent it to the ministry, thus escaping the scandal against fleeing monarchs, of robbing the State of the crown jawels.

The jawel cage is the great point of interest for the feminine visitors to the Exposition, and the police are obliged to keep the crowd moving. or otherwise the women would stand in fascinated awe for hours, never willing to move.
But though these jewels are beautiful. I think it is the mystic associations which lend them
most of their enchantment—for they are quite equaled in costliness and splendor by those exhibited in the jewelry department of the French exhibit. I imagine it is the memory of the knigly negationers who have strated their heid days ly personages who have strutted their brief days adorned by them, which fascinates the minds of the crowds-the long succession of great and little monarchs since Louis XI, who have worn these as the insignia of national power, give them their peculiar charm.

The editor of the Marshalitown (Iowa) Statesman says that, after considering the question all winter, he comes to the conclusion every spring that the circus is immoral, but then the bill poster comes along with the big pictures, and his mind changes as follows: "As we gaze at the lions, tigers and monkeys, and think that nature made all of them, we are not so sure. And when we look at the beautiful young lady, with nothing on but a blue ribbon round her wasst, and one log pointing to six o'clock and the other to high noon, and think that nature made her too, just as she was, ex cept the ribbon, we begin to lean up to the circus. But when the brass band begins to play and the elephants go round, we rush in for a front seat to get in ahead of the ministers, who always wear stove pipe hate and won't sit down in front."

Last month a Tark, Fein Pasha, governor of Bainjainka, with twelve wives, children, and a guard of eunuchs, arrived in Vienna, and took lodging in the Hotel Daniel. Three wives were put in a room, with a guard of two eunuchs at each door. It took a whole day to complete the registration of the party at police headquarters. The most of the wives were real beauties, wear ing their raven black hair closely cut and dyeing their finger pails. Under Austrian law these ladies were entitled to their personal freedom, and the German reporter naively says, "If they only knew it." Each cuauch carries a gun on one arm and a baby on the
